

Conference, workshops celebrate Portland green Spaces

by justin.stranzl

Published: January 20th, 2006

Next week's weather forecast calls for still more gray skies, but Portland designers can expect to see a lot of green when the second Spaces conference hits town.

The architectural firm SERA and the Portland arm of the consulting engineering firm Glumac are expecting LEED-CI certifications for their office spaces. And a Pearl District Wells Fargo branch will learn soon whether its $500,000 renovation, designed by Bainbridge Design with aid from Green Building Services, was worthy of an expected gold rating.

"Tenants are getting more interested," Aye said. "Part of it is lack of education - how do you do it and make it affordable for your client and so forth. That's what this conference and workshops are for. We've got the people who are applying sustainability in the marketplace."

Complete URL: <http://djcoregon.com/news/2006/01/20/conference-workshops-celebrate-portlands-green-spaces/>